EXPLANATION
The verb (which includes the subject pronoun) occurs at the end of the sentence, after the direct object. The indefinite article (‘a’) is not translated.
Where nouns are modified, there is a choice of word order: the modifier (an adjective or relative clause) can precede or follow the noun. If it follows, then the final vowel is doubled and a –b added (indicating object case). Compare akra tak ‘strong man’ and tak akraab, translated here as ‘a man that is strong’ (actually ‘strong man’ would also be a reasonable translation, but we have presented the data as if the word-order change mirrored a change in translation, just to make things more straightforward when it comes to possible translations in the exercise). If it is a relative clause, an –e is added to the verb, but again the two word-orders are possible, with the same vowel-doubling +b rule: from Tak rihan ‘I saw a man’ we get Rihane tak or tak rihaneeb, both translated as ‘a man that I saw’ (because in English we can’t say something like ‘a seen by me man’ with the relative clause preceding the noun).
